JAIL PROBLEMS - Sgt. Scott Kenforth, a corrections officer at the Jefferson County jail, examines booking information Wednesday. Sheriff Fred Abdalla has said 15 employees would be laid off and two-thirds of the available cell space would be closed.

No one's sure what's next for jail

By JIM DOBBS
Staff writer

What happens now? That's the question Jefferson County Sheriff Fred Abdalla is asking himself.

With Abdalla's announcement that 15 adult detention employees will be laid off and two-thirds of the new county jail's available cell space will be closed, Abdalla said county residents are faced with few options: either close the jail completely or fund its operation through a new levy.

"The ultimate solution will lie with the citizens of Jefferson County. I know they're fed up with this, but no one is more upset and more nauseated by this than me. I've been wrestling with this for five years," Abdalla said. They wanted a jail, and they got ripped off. They've got one now. The question is, what will they do with it?"

The jail's operating costs, particularly related to staffing levels, have been a major point of contention between county officials and the jail's architect and former project manager, the V Group, and have ultimately led to the layoffs and cell closings and may lead to more.

"This is just the first cut," Abdalla said. "I still don't have enough money to operate. I still have to cut down."

By the end of the month, 14 corrections officers and a nurse will be off their jobs and cell space in the 120-inmate jail will be limited to 40 adult prisoners.

County and V Group officials have verbally sparred on a number of occasions over responsibility for $7 million in cost overruns in the jail's construction, delays in the project's completion, and consultation services by the company used in determining staffing levels for the $25 million facility. The jail finally opened for business in January, more than a year after its scheduled opening date.

The county, company and various construction contractors are involved in a finger-pointing lawsuit in U.S. district court over the jail project.

The sparring continued Wednesday, as V Group official defended his company's action regarding the jail.

"Certainly, there is a group of officials the sheriff being one of them, that would if the river flooded today, blame the V Group," Frank Fela, vice president of the Cleveland-based architecture and consulting company, said Wednesday.

Fela said staffing levels and operating costs for the jail were submitted to state.
